raised. An old shoe is also generally found along with the iron and stones under the floor. Occasionally bits of dried tulasi plant (Ocymum sanctum) are also scattered about the floor or again a bunch of tulasi may be tied at the base of the central pole. This pole stuck in the centre of the house being built is not a part of the permanent construction, but is a device to render the building work satisfactory and protect the home from demons taking possession of it while in the process of construction. On the pole can be seen hanging a basket and in this basket were found pieces of iron and tin, and bits of the outer lepod[1] covering of another house. It may be taken from the walls of a house in which a happily married and prosperous family lived. In an earthen pot placed on the floor there was a yellowish liquid. The builder told us that this was water, but it had the appearance of cow's urine, although this could not be confirmed. Occasionally there is a sign of a little shrine about the construction somewhere, which shows signs of the presentation of the hom offering.

The inner floor of the house will be filled in and packed down after the walls are up. In dwellings of good construction the floor of the interior of the house should be higher than the veranda floor, and the veranda floor should, in turn, be higher than that of the courtyard. Kol houses have no windows, and the door-ways are low. On entering one must bow, or even get down on hands and knees. Bowing as one enters is said to be a method of showing respect to the household deities. Windows might let in evil forces, hence none is included.

Women may aid in building the house, but their work is limited to assisting in building the walls and floor of the house by bringing the earth or water, mixing them and helping to place the mud in the proper place. They take no part, however, in the construction of the roof. This is not a woman's job, and for a woman to get upon a roof is taboo—a thing that requires punishment or a fine.

Kols are able to construct the whole house. If the roof is to be of grass, the grass is brought from the forests, and kusa (Poa cynosuroides) and duba (Agrostis linearis) are generally used. If tiles are utilized, cheap country tiles are obtained from the village potter. The Kol puts the tiles on the roof himself. The only thing which he cannot make is the door and frame, but these may be bought quite cheaply in the markets or may be made for him by the village carpenter. They are set in the opening left for the door, and the mud is packed in about them. There is usually but one door to a house. The more primitive types of houses so common among twelve rupees, payable in two equal instalments. Two saris are often presented at this time—one for the girl and another for her mother. The washing of the feet and the payment of the bride price are definite expressions of the acceptance of the proposal. Nevertheless, the engagement thus sealed may be broken if either party is dissatisfied. If the girl's side breaks the engagement they must return the bride price and the presents. If the boy's side breaks it they are not entitled to any refund and the money may be kept by the girl's family.

(b) Betrothal and Lagan. The lagan is a letter given by the bride's father to the bridegroom's father, appointing the day of the marriage and ceremonies connected therewith and thus providing an outline for this part of the wedding cycle. The lagan should be prepared by the pandit of the girl's village or one selected by her family. When the time is ripe for the boy and girl to be formally married the Brahmin priest is called to the house or is informed of the proposal and is asked to write up the lagan. The lagan should have the complete programme for the sadi worked out after consulting horoscopes and taking into account auspicious or inauspicious seasons and circumstances. The best days for weddings are, in order, Monday, Saturday, Thursday and Tuesday, and the lagan will take this into account. The luckiest months are Chaita (March-April), Magh (January-February) and Phagun (February-March). After the lagan is written the paper is sprinkled with haldi water. Here is an actual example of a Kol lagan:

SHRI

Shri—may god Ganesh help us. Hari the lord was worshipped with gur (raw sugar) and sendur (vermilion). The son of Sail named Matukdhari has been selected as the bridegroom. May the lord make the marriage time auspicious.

On Wednesday, the sixth day of the bright fortnight of Magh, the marriage bower will be constructed; on Thursday, the seventh day, the anointing ceremony will take place; on Friday, the eighth, the bridegroom's marriage party will come and on Saturday, the ninth, the circumambulation of the marriage post will take place.

roof is formed by bamboo branches covered with banana leaves. Around the upper edge of the markwa is hung a frieze of mango twigs. Mango leaves are always found in connection with Kol weddings; they do not wither easily and are a symbol of everlastingness and stability. Strips of paper, usually coloured red, are used for decoration. The ground under the markwa is carefully levelled and plastered with cowdung and in the very centre a hole twelve to eighteen inches deep is dug. This is where the central pole will be placed. Before the pole is lowered into position a supari nut (Areca catechu), some pieces of haldi (usually five) and two-pice coins are placed in the pit, and according to some accounts, rice coloured with haldi is also thrown in. The magrohan is a piece of wood three to four feet in length and two to four inches in diameter. It should preferably be green wood, though a dry pole is used if a fresh one is not available. It is coloured red with sendur or yellow with haldi and has some thread, coloured either white or yellow, wrapped about it seven times from the top to the bottom. Along with the magrohan a short green bamboo stick is fixed together with a green gular branch and the iron bar used in digging the holes for the booth. If the central post should be of gular or other wood a bit of saleh must be inserted with it. The saleh is a symbol of fertility, being an evergreen tree which never withers and takes root easily and quickly; even an apparently dry stick will sprout. After the magrohan has been put in place it is reverently circuited by the builders seven times in a clockwise direction and then sendur and cowdung are applied. The sacred pole stands at the centre of the wedding observances and at that time is surrounded by the articles now to be mentioned. Their position is indicated in figure 21 on the next page.

1. The magrohan.
2. A kalsa (earthenware pot) filled with water. In the water there are mango leaves which are allowed to protrude at the top and over the top is placed a dip or earthenware lamp.
3. A sil (grinding stone) on which are placed the following articles noted in the sub-heads:
   a. A lorha (stone roller)—which the bridegroom will use to roll over the pice and disturb their arrangement.
   b. Husked rice, which is sprinkled over the surface of the sil.
   c. Seven pice coins which are laid in a row on top of the rice.
   d. Seven bits of wood, each a different kind.
   e. A whole supari nut.
   f. Haldi water is sprinkled over the whole.
4. A branch of gular or palasa (Butea frondosa) buried near the magrohan. In a crotch of the same will be inserted a small earthen pot containing haldi, supari nut and two pice.

yellow haldi water and keeps it in a number of lotas. As the guests are about to depart the women appear with the haldi water and hajra (lamp-black), the latter being in the form of a paste. The yellow water is sprinkled over the departing guests and the lamp-black is applied just below the eyes. This is considered auspicious and both are believed to have a protective significance. In jest the hajra is sometimes applied to other parts of the face and hearty laughs and ridicule result, all of which the party must bear cheerfully. The girl's mother should sprinkle the haldi water on the boy's father and after she has done this and put the colour below his eyes she holds her brass lota before him and he is expected to drop some money into it—at least one rupee. The rest of the men are then sprinkled by the other women and are also asked to give a gift, but not as much as the father gave. The women then courteously salute and go off taking with them the lotas containing the coins.

For a brief time the men of the two parties remain seated together, eat pan supari and pass around the hukka for a smoke. Finally the boy's party gets up and all go to the edge of the village together where they embrace and separate. This ends the first part of the wedding cycle.

(2) Domestic Preparations. The time that is to elapse between the writing of the lagan and the sadi is fixed by the lagan itself and depends on several factors of an astrological nature. Usually there is less than a month between them. During this period there are active preparations in both houses as certain important things must be accomplished.

In the girl's village some uncooked rice coloured with haldi is taken around by members of the family and given to those who are to be invited to the ceremonies. With the rice the time and place of the ceremonies are made known. There should be plenty of supplies of food on hand and among the things listed there should be sendur, a dauri (small basket), new clothes, cash for small gifts and payments, rice, pulse, especially urad pulse (Phaseolus radiatus) and wheat.

(a) Mangarmati. The mangarmati or magarmati is a ceremony whereby a certain amount of earth is obtained from which chulhas, or earthen fireplaces, are to be constructed. This ceremony, which is performed at both homes and on the same night, is essentially alike in both the houses and must be performed after sunset. Only the women take part in the gathering of the sacred earth, but we were allowed to watch a mangarmati ceremony in the Kaimur hills. It was found that a portion of the courtyard just in front of the house had parations are then made for the bridegroom to eat lahakaur, the food prepared especially for the occasion. This may be of several types. It is sometimes said to consist of rice, pulse, puris and bara ; and again of milk, rice and sugar. This is brought by a female member of the family, the sarhaj (bride's brother's wife) being preferred. Before the boy is asked to eat the lahakaur two women dressed in dancing garments make their appearance ; they sing and dance and are accompanied by some men with their drums. This party advances towards the janmasa singing songs which contain many questionable allusions and are considered as gali (abuse). They carry the emptied kalsa with the lighted lamp still on top of it, and place it before the boy who is asked to go around it seven times and sit down. When he has done this the sarhaj tries to make him eat the lahakaur ; she brings it up to his mouth five times in her right hand and after smelling it as many times he refuses to eat. She is paid four annas for this by the boy's father. There is more singing and the giving of gali by both sides. Finally the sarhaj brings a lota of water and washes the feet of the members of the boy's party and at the same time openly counts them so that they may know how many will need food. Much of this food has already been cooked but it is not served till midnight or later. In the meantime, during the meal, and even for the rest of the night, there are songs and the dadra dance.

About eleven o'clock the next morning the members of the bridegroom's party take their morning meal at the bride's house, but the groom stays by himself in the janmasa where his food is brought to him. When the others arrive their feet are washed as before and each member is given a lota of water so that he may wash his hands. The male members of the two parties always eat together first and the meal is usually served on leaf-plates, or, if they are available, brass ones. The men then go for a chat and rest and sometime later the women take their food. At no time do the men and women eat together.

(b) Sadi. The Actual Ceremony. The evening of the second day sees the performance of the marriage proper, the sadi. The premises of the girl's house are again plastered and all made clean and ready. The Brahmin priest who wrote the lagan is expected to arrive after nightfall. If the family should decide to dispense with his services the part of the priest may be taken by the phupha (father's sister's husband). The priest first marks out a square, called the chauk, on the plastered portion of the courtyard not far from the wedding booth, using whole wheat flour to mark the lines. A kalsa is then placed at its centre into which will be thrown the gifts for the 585 (wedding crown) is removed. He then turns to his bride and takes off a portion of the sari covering her head and sees her features for the first time. She immediately covers her head again. This is [788] repeated seven times but after the seventh he does not again remove the covering, and it is said that henceforth her head is to remain covered to the day of her death if he outlives her, and to the day of his death if she becomes a widow. A sari cloth is now brought and is [554] wrapped about the boy and girl; in the seclusion of this the boy puts 386 some sendur, with the little finger of his right hand, on the girl's forehead indicating that she is now a married woman. The first three [926] fingers should on no account be used. The Brahmin now takes his leave, for his work is done, and he is paid a fee usually amounting to Rs. 1-4-0.

585 574 The boy soon comes out of the house and greets his friends and tells his party that it is time for them to retire to the janmasa. Before they are allowed to depart, however, they are invited to a feast close to the marhwa. Their feet are again washed and a feast, as lavish as can be managed, is given them. At least the following should be [262 provided: rice, pulse, bara, puris, curds, spices and sweets. Some- 273 times there is drinking but the Kols are not much addicted to this. The bridegroom begins the feast by taking the first mouthful; then the others may start. Usually they eat seated in a circle on the ground and are entertained at the time by singing and dancing. The bridegroom is paid four annas for starting things off and the rest of the night is spent in this manner.

(c) Bida (or bidai): The Return of the Bridegroom to his House. The returning party leaves the girl's village on the third day. About noon on that day there is another feast, the final one, which is only for [607] the members of the departing company, except that the bridegroom's [606] sar (brother-in-law) also eats with them. The groom refuses to eat until his mother-in-law promises him a gift such as a goat or a cow. The bridegroom is also presented with the gifts which were made to the couple and these are handed over to his swasa to keep for him. The men of both parties embrace and put a tika of sendur on one another, each man waving a pice over the head of another and then presenting it to him. Ilachi (cardamom), pan and supari are distributed.

585 The women now appear in a group and the mother-in-law puts lamp black under the eyes of the boy's father and also sprinkles a bit of haldi water over him. The other women do the same to the remaining members of the bridegroom's party. A bit of lac on a string is sometimes tied about their necks. The boy's father drops a rupee into

If the husband is the complainant he tells the panch his grievances, and brings specific charges against his wife. Others present may confirm his charges if they believe them to be true. He states his desire and his particular intention in this case. It should be noted that the decision of the panchayat is not absolutely binding on the parties. If the panch decides that the man is in the right and if he gets his hoped-for decision everything is satisfactory for him; if not he may go against their decision, but it will not be without a fine or a feast of some kind to atone for it. If the woman is also present and if she wishes she may make her own defence, although if another defends her it must be done by a male member of her family. If the charges are admitted either by the woman or her representative the matter is easily settled, for the panchayat will allow him to divorce her without any penalty. If the woman is present she is then brought to the centre of the circle and a member of the panch orders her husband to go to her and remove seven times the portion of the sari covering her head; this is the sign of the dissolution of the marriage. She is not required to remove her glass bangles which are the real signs of marriage. These are broken, however, by the man with whom she goes to live (as most of the cases seem to involve a man), and he gives her new bangles in their place.

If the woman brings the charge against her husband, or if she is favoured in case he brings it against her, and the husband does not accept the panch's ruling, he may still dismiss her from his house and keep, but he must pay a penalty. In Maihar and Rewa we were informed that the decision was not final until the matter had been presented to an officer called Mahata, who is paid Rs. 1-4-0 for his judgment and must give the final assent. He is looked upon as a government servant, but his post was said to be hereditary.

If the woman should leave her husband and go to another man, the panchayat insists that the man taking her must pay a fine, while the former husband has no blame attached to him. Nevertheless if the wife was regularly married to her first husband, the man who takes her not only has to pay the fine but also must return to her former husband the amount of money that the latter paid as the bride price when first they were married. One group told us that if the wife wanted to go away for other reasons than to marry a man, she is free to do so and the panchayat does not interfere, nor is any fine involved. The complications begin, however, if she should want to marry again; it is then that the panchayat steps in. If the woman refuses to recognize this and if she should try to run away with another man, the panchayat advises that the matter be taken to the civil courts where 796 177 to say, Kols living away from strong Hindu influences do not pay particular attention to this, although it is known and mentioned.

Dasara is a very important Hindu festival and is celebrated on the tenth day of the Hindu month Kunwar—portions of September and October. In this case again, the Kols enter into it quite freely, yet it is not one of their important festivals. The Hindu legends connected with this day seem to indicate that it is a day to celebrate a victory and hold military displays.

[788] Any observation among the Kols usually takes the form of a procession of men to the village boundary, carrying with them lights and torches, the procession being marked by the beating of drums and the singing of the men. From there they return home rejoicing as if from a victory, and are greeted by the women who have a feast ready.

It is also a semi-agricultural festival with some, as the wheat should not be sown till after Dasara. Ten days before Dasara wheat is sown in the houses. This is discussed in connection with the Jawara festiyal,[1] which seems to be the most important to the Kol and overlaps both Dasara and Holi.

[821] Devali. This is the feast of lights and comes twenty days after Dasara, and is held on the new moon day (Amavasya) of the Hindu month Kartik (October-November). This too is predominantly a Hindu festival, and the Kols observance is largely by imitation. Hindus set out lights, and the illuminations, particularly in cities [775] where it is well observed, are very beautiful. The Hindu believes that on this night the souls of the good dead return to visit their old haunts. So the houses are made ready—all is clean; old earthen lamps are thrown away and new ones replace them. The new ones should burn all night, and the family will stay up to receive the spirits of their deceased, not yet reborn.

Kols usually go no further than first burning a diya inside the house in front of the inner place of worship, invoking, they say, Shardamai, though the names of all the gods and goddesses known to them should be uttered before the shrine, as well as the names of their own sainted dead. Then the lamp is taken up and together with a few others is set on the doorstep to guide the spirit. If the Kol has any wealth, he may worship that too; but there is usually so little that they do not take it into account.

Hareli. The word literally means "greenery", and it appears that only the Hinduized Kols have much knowledge of it. Among
